Dr. Paul Gestwicki is a Professor in the Computer Science Department at Ball State University. Much of Dr. Gestwicki's teaching, research, and service connect to his interest in game design and development. He has been working with multidisciplinary undergraduate teams to create original games with community partners for over fifteen years. Past partners have included the Indiana State Museum, The Children's Museum in Indianapolis, Minnetrista Museum & Gardens, and Muncie Public Library. In addition to producing several award-winning games, Dr. Gestwicki has authored or co-authored over a dozen scholarly articles relating to his work in game design and development. When he is not working on university business, Dr. Gestwicki can be found playing board games, participating in game jams, making music, or otherwise spending time with his wife and four sons.

Education

- Ph.D., Computer Science and Engineering, University at Buffalo, 2005.
- M.S., Computer Science and Engineering, University at Buffalo, 2000.

Research Interests

- Serious game design and development
- Computer Science and interdisciplinary education
- Interactive software and hybrid systems

Recognitions

Senior Member, Association of Computing Machinery
